

Family Owned & Operated for 39 Years

Carpet • Vinyl • Laminate • Wood • Tile

Larsen Carpet

212 Walnut, Yankton ~ 605.665.2067

Politics In The New Territory

P&D ARCHIVE PHOTOS

The original territorial capitol (above) was built at the intersection of Fourth and Capitol in Yankton. When political interests snatched the government seat from Yankton in 1883, local residents were outraged and the capitol building became known as a "disgraceful eyesore." It was eventually hauled away and turned into a chicken coop. However, tempers cooled after more than a century and a replica of that original capitol was constructed in Yankton in 1989 (below).

Greed Often Reared Its Head In Territorial Politics, And Yankton Wound Up Paying A Steep Price

BY STATE REP. BERNIE HUNHOFF
For the Press & Dakotan

I've often wondered, while making the four-hour drive to Pierre, if perhaps Yankton wouldn't be our capital city yet today if our forefathers would have behaved themselves? Of course, that's water under the bridge. But the 150th observance of Yankton's founding and the creation of our territorial government is a proper occasion to learn from the past. The truth is that we could have been a better capitol city, and we paid a price.

First of all, we should have done the obvious things like investing in the construction of a governor's mansion and a capitol building, and sharing the spoils with our potential opponents from the north and west.

We did the exact opposite. As I recall, the capitol building that we did build was eventually moved east of town and rehabbed into a chicken coop. Every governor had to build his own home, and most of them came from the South where they didn't suffer our frost-freeze cycle, so all but one of their "mansions" were soon torn down. (The only one still standing, The Pennington House, now provides offices for our South Dakota Magazine at Third and Pearl.)

And as for spoils for the opponents? Gov. Pennington was a good man and probably one of the top territorial governors, but even he had his peccadilloes. For example, he created Pennington County, modestly had it named for himself, and then proceeded to appoint his friends, rather than Black Hills leaders, to the county posts. Many of them didn't even go West to serve — they handled the duties from Yankton.

Patronage was almost the order of the day, but there were far worse transgressions. Some of our Yankton streets (Burleigh and Picotte) now honor the names of early leaders who were the subject of numerous complaints about election irregularities, bribery and other forms of corruption.

Even the Yankton gang quarreled among themselves. There were rivalries and jealousies between businessmen on Broadway and Capitol streets, according to historian Herbert Schell's fine book, "The History of South Dakota."

Indian issues, railroad rights-of-way, the formation of counties and numerous other challenges faced the territorial Legislature and the Yankton leaders.

They muddled their way along, as governments usually do, but not many citizens in the sprawling Dakota Territory were impressed with their Yankton leadership. The local gang knew of the growing dissension, but they felt they had an advantage because any re-organization of the territory had to occur within the city limits of Yankton.

"Undaunted by such legal obstacles," wrote Schell, "the nine members (of the capitol commission) secretly proceeded to Sioux City where in the early hours of April 3, 1883, they boarded a special train consisting of an engine and a single coach, and set out for the capital. As they reached the city limits at about six o'clock that morning, they halted the train briefly while they organized themselves. Then followed a junketing through the Territory by the 'The Capital on Wheels,' as the commission was nicknamed ...."

That midnight trip doomed Yankton as the state capital. We had it, and we let it slip from our grasp — because of greed, self-interest and a frugal disinclination to make smart investments at the right moment.

I'm not suggesting that there are any lessons to be learned in this sad story. But you know what they say about history ...

That midnight trip doomed Yankton as the state capital. We had it, and we let it slip from our grasp — because of greed, self-interest and a frugal disinclination to make smart investments at the right moment.

P&D ARCHIVE PHOTO

An early Supreme Court of Dakota Territory. The body included William E. Gleason (who served from 1865-1867), Jefferson P. Kidder (1865-1875), Ara Bartlett (1864-1869) and John W. Boyle (1867-1869).

Rexall
"93"
Hair Tonic

In The Summer Time

When the scalp becomes irritated or inflamed, itching begins, such a condition at Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. It soothes and soothes, restores natural health to the scalp, and restores hair to its normal condition.

Wherever you need the season, whether in the city or in the country, you will find it at the Rexall Store.

This preparation is guaranteed to give satisfaction. If it does not, come back and get your money. It belongs to you and we stand by it.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is sold at all Rexall Stores. It is not sold elsewhere.

These preparations are prepared by using 2,000 years of experience in the United States. They are made in Yankton, South Dakota, under the supervision of Dr. J. W. Rexall, who has been practicing medicine in Yankton since 1877.

UNITED DRUG CO.
50 East Street, Boston, Mass.

Times May Have Changed... But the philosophy at Yankton Rexall hasn't!

- Where the pharmacists can call you by name and you can call them after hours.
- Where the owner is behind the counter and has invested his professional life in our hometown community!
- Where you can call, fax or send via internet your prescription order and it will be ready when you arrive or use our convenient drive-thru window!

Continued Confidence Since 1923

